When, in consequence of age and dis-ease, the hair becomes weak, thin, and gray, Ayer's Hair Vigor will strong it, restore its original color, promote its rapid and vigorous growth, and impart to it the lustre and freshness of youth. I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for a long time, and sim concluded of its value. When I was if years of ago my hair began to turn g ay. I commenced using the Vigor, and was surprised at the good effects it produced. It not only restored the color to my hair, but so stimulated its growth, that I have now more hair fram ever before—yesterday

Gentlemen of the City Counc t

It has frequently been suggested by my predecessors! that it should more properly be the daty of the outgoing Mayor to re view the work of the various departments, and make the recommendations as to the future, at the inauguration of each City Government, but as each one has seemed to think of this duty as bearing more heavily upon his own immediate predecessor than upon I maelf, we are still left, while endorrang their sentiments, to follow

By the terms of the amendments which have been secured through the exertions of our diviens, I believe, the rights of the road are well protected, and that it a prospects are brighter to-day than ever before in its h story.

We are nearing the accomplishment of the purpose for which the road was projected, and has been carried through ocompletion—a circet connection with a great through line to the West—and it is should be operated in connection with that line, to make a competing outlet to and from the West and place us a possition to compete successfully with other centres in the distribution of more chandise throughout the greater part of our State. outlet to had from the west and place in a position to compete successfully with other centres in the distribution of marchandise throughout the greater part of the preceding year, and as Mr Bragg says, should be made by the sutgoing rather than the incoming Mayor, who, of course, | New York Letter to Des Moines Register (Rep.) under ordinary circumstances, can only have such knowledge of the work of the previous administration as he gleans from the reports of the heads of departments and who was one of Arthul's strongest a devoted to the financial standing of the city in which it is shown that the present direct liability of the city aggregates 8801 000, or $16 000 less than one year ago. The railroad question comes next, the Mayor taking a most hopeful view of the future of the Bangor nid Piscataquis, pointing out its importance to the city as a connecting link with the great west, thus enabling our merchants to successfully compete with other sections of the State as a centre of supply 1 ne work of the various departments is carefully reviewed showing on the Mayor calls attention to several payments that full due tris year, which will have the effect of increasing the total amount of money approp lated, thus rendering a r duction in the tax rate very difficult, but he urges the strictest economy in every department to the end that the lenst possible expense consistent with good covernment. Mr Bragg makes no pledges other than a promise to give the people 'aithful service leaving his administration to sepack for itself at the ond of the year.

The unanimous election of Mr C S and who was one of Arthul's strongest in 1884, and was surported in 1884, and was surported to the and hum heartily saying that Blaine is the man in 1885. They now call the exsoldiers paupers, bounts jumpered, pordioseros. This hurling of epithets at men who have some reputation as good fighters is supposed to be very effective. It is effective in a certain way. It is a seffective as the course of the boy who when he was brooked down by a play mate, ran into the course of the boy who when he was knocked down by a play nate, ran into the 185 CO house and standing at the window, made H. It should be understood once for all that the men who had their courage tested in the time of battle are not cowards now and are not less manly than they were when they demonstrated that here were of the material of which soldiers are made. There is no reason why the man who wears the Grand Army button should not be as proud of his designation as are the members of the old Legion of Honor The members of the legion were, the most of them, neuslaners, and it was no disgrace to be a pensioner It was never meant that it should be a disgrace for a wounded veteran or a disable one to be a pensioner in this country If certain Democratic papers ic gard it as a mark of disgrace for a man to wear a Grand Army bu ton, or for him to be proud of what he accomplished when he was a soldier, or proud of the record which he made in the army, or if these papers believe that it is some way lowers the standard of manliness for a man to receive a pension from the government, no one one can prevent it. They should be allowed to make themselves as miserable as it suits their mood to be, but whenever they make an assault on the soldiers as a class they ought to hear from the people

It does not require much talent or courage or spirit to call an old soldler a hard name, but it does require a phenomina amount of cheek for any Democratic paper to assume that the stat is of the Union soldiers is to be fixed by the enemies of the soldier It is well, hewever, that the Democratic papers are puthing themselves on The soldiers themselves and the friends of the soldiers will soon be able to classify their enemies, and among the most vindictive they will class those who speak through the sheets given up to the abu doners, to the abuse of orippled and helpless veterans, to the slander of men whose shoes they are not worthy to brush,

The Wager Still Rising.

Towns Cut Off From all Commu-Leation.

BISMAROK, March Mt. The river is still rising an inch an hour, having already passed the high water mark of the memorable flood of 1831. All the low lands are now inundated. The only houses flooded on the Bismarck ade are a few squatters' shantles. From the bluffs one can see high cakes of ice up near the streets of Mandan. The only method of connection between the towns is vii. Cheyenne and Ogden. The Boston syndicate property, including a flouring mill and come fifty residences, elevator, shops and everything south of a flouring mill and some fifty residences, elevator, shops and everything south of the track, is submerged. The Upper Heart river has not yet broken. The loose lee began running again this evening. The indications are that the Fort Butord rise is teginning to be folk. The Scenes Defy Description. The Seenes Dely Description.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., March 21. Judge Francis, of Dakota, reached here to-day. He says the scenes in the flooded districts defy description. Lee cakes a hundred feet square were thrown in the air several feet whenever they struck an obstacle. The force of the current suspped the cables holding a watchouse to the bank as though they were cotton threads. The warehouse, over 600 feet long, was moved some distance and landed high and dry. If the Missouri should now dam up and If the Missouri should now dam up the Vellowstone break away and pour its the Yeilowstone break away and pour its ce against the ice in the Missouri, the result at Mandan would be terrible. "It seems strange," said the judge, "to have Mandan in full view yet less accessible to communication than London."

CHAPTER III

MIL FRANK MULIER John Niel woke early next morning; feeling as sore and stiff as though he had been well beaten and then strapped up tight in horse girtls. He made shift, however, to circus hinself, and then, with the help of a stick, impet through the Franch windows that opened from his room on to the veranda and surveyed the screen before him. It was a desurveyed the scene before him. It was a de-lightful spot. At the back of the house was the steep, bowlier strong face of the flat topped hill that curved round on each side, the steep, bowlier strews face of the flat topped hill that curved round on each side, embosoming a great slope of green, in the lap of which the house was placed. The house itself was solidly built of brown stone, and, with the exception of the wagon shed and other quthouses, which were roofed; with galvanized fron that shone and glistened in the rays of the morning sun in a way that would have nade an eagle blink; was covered with rich brown thatch. All along its front ran a wide veranda, up the trellis work of, which green vines and blooming crospers challed pleasantly, and beyond was the broad arriage crive of red soil, bordered with hishy orange trees laden with odorous flowers and green and golden fruit. On the farther side of the, range trees were the gardens, fenced in wife low walls of rough stone, and the orchard full of standard fruit trees, and beyond these again the pion and ostrich kraals, the latter full of long necked birds. To the right of the house grew thriving plantations of blue gum and black waths, and to the left was a broad stretch of caltivated lands, lying so that they could be irrigated for winter crops by means of water led from the great spring that gushed from the mountain side high above the touss and gave its name of Mocifontein to the place.

All these and many more things John Nial its name of Monifontein to the place All these and many more things John Nial saw as he looked out from the verands at An titles and many more things John Mai saw as he looked out from the verands at Modifontein, but, for the moment at any rate, they were lost in the wild and wonderful beauty of the panerama that relied away for miles and miles at his feet, till it was ended by the mighty range of the Brakensberg to the left, tipped here and there with snow, and by the dim and vast horizon of the welling Transvani plains to the right and far in front of him. It was a heautiful sight, and one to make the blood run in a man's vehis and his heart beat happily because he was alve fo see it. Mile upon mile of grass clothed dalt beneath, bending and rippling like a corn field in the quick breath of the morning, space upon space, of deep blue sky overhead with neer a cloud to dim it, and the swift rush of the wind between. Then to the left there, impressive to look on and conductive to solemn thoughts, the mountains rear their crests against the sky, and, crowned with the gathered moves of the canturies whose monuments they are, from son to seen guzz majestically out over the wide fuling and the ephemeral, and like races that tread them, and while they endure think themselves the mas-ters of their little world. And over at ephemeral, antilke races that tread them, and while ttoy ondure think themselves the masters of their little world. And over all-mountain, plain and flashing stream—the glorious light of the African sim, and the spirit of life moving now as it once moved upon the dariening waters.

John stood and gazed at the untarned beauty of the scene, in his mind comparing it to many cultivated views that he had known, and coming to the conclusion that, however desirably the presence of civilized man might be in the world, it could not be said that his operations really added to its beauty. For the old line, "Nature unadorned adorned the most," still remains true in mr re senses than one. Fresently his reflections were invertigated by the step of Silas Croft, which, notwithstanding his age and bert fram, still rung firm enough—and he turned to greet him.

"Well, Capt. Niel," said the old man, "up already it looks well if you mean to take to farming. Yes, it's a pretty view, and a pretty place, too. Well, I made it. Twenty-fire years ago I rode up here and saw this spot. Look, you see that rock there behind the house, I sleph under it and woke at s anries and looked out at this beautiful view and at the great veldt (it was all alive with game then), and I said to myself, 'Silan, for five and twenty years have you wendered about this great country, and now you are getting then this or a healthing; now be a wise man and stop here. And so I did. I bought 3,000 mcrgen (5,000 acres), more or less, for 210 down and n case of gin, and I set to work to make this place, and you see I have made it. Ay, it has grown under my hand, every stone and tree of it, and you know what that means in a new country. But one way and another I have done it, and our larves of too old to manage it, and that's bow I came to give out that I wanted a partner, as o d Snow tild you do with an Durban. You see I told Snow it must be a gentleman; I don't care much about the money, I'll take a thousand for a third share if I can get a gentleman—upon of your Boers or mean whites for me. I'tell you, I have had crough of Boers and their ways; the best day of my life was when old Shepstone ranup the Union Jack there in Pratoria and I could call myself ar Englishman again, Lord and to think that there are men who are subjects of the queen and went to be subcould call myself ar Englishman again.

Lord! and to think that there are men who are subjects of the queen and want to be subjects of a republic again! Mad! Capt. Niel, I tell you, quite mad! However, there's an end of it all now. You know what Sir Garnet Wilseley told there in the name of the queen 'up at the Vaul river, that this country would remail English till the sun stood stil uten heavens and the waters of the Vaul river, that this country would remail English till the sun stood stil uten heavens and the waters of the Vaul river, that this country would remail English till the sun stood stil uten heavens and the waters of the Vaul rar: backward. That's good enough for me, for, as I tell these grumbling fellows who want the land back now that we have paid their debts and defeated their enersies, no English government goes back on its word, or breats engagements solennily entered, into by its representatives. We leave that sort of thing to foreigners. No, no, Capt. Niel, I would not ask you to take a share in this place if I was,'t sure that it would remain under the British flag. But we will talk of all this snother time, and now come in to breakfast, as John was far too imme to go about the farm the fair Bessie suggested that he should come and help her to wash a batch of cestrich feathers, and, accordingly, off he went. The locus operandi was in a space off grass in the renr of a little clump of 'mantche' or runge trees, of which the fruit is like that of the Maltees orange, only larger. Here were placed an ordinary washing tub half filled with warm water and a tin bath full of cold. The estrich feathers, many of which were completely coated with red dirt, were plunged first into the tab of warm water, where Jot, in lole acrubbed them with soap, and then transferred to the tin red dirt, were plunged first into the tab of warm water, where John Niel scrubbed thom with soap, and then to maderred to the the bath, where Bessie rinsed them and then laid them on a sheet in the sun to dry. The morning was, very pleasant, and John soon came to the conclusion that there are many more disagreeable occupations in the world than the washing of ostrich feathers with a lovely first to help you; for there was no doubt but that she was lovely, a very type of happy, healthy womanhood.

there was no doubt but that she was lovely, a very type of happy, healthy womanhood, as she sat there opposite to him or the little stool, her sieeves rolled up almost to the shoulder, showing a pair of arms that would not have disgraced a status of Venus, and laughed and chatted away as she washed the feathers. Now, John Niel was not a susceptible man; he had gone through the fire years before and burned his fingers like many another roulding youngster; but, all the same, he did wonder as he sat there and watched this fair grit, who somehow reminded him of a rich rosebud tursting into bloom, how long it would be possible to live in the same house with her without failing under the spell of her charm and beauty. And then he began to think of Jess, and what a strange contrast the twy were.

then he began to think of Joss, and what a strange contract the two were.

"Where is your elector? he askectspresently. "Jest Oh. I think that she has gone to the Idon Kloof, reading or sixching, I don't know which. You see, in this establishment I represent labor and Joss represents infalled, and she noticed her head prettile thin, and added, "There is a nilstake somewhere; she got all the brains."

"Ah," said John, quiety, and looking up as her, "I don't think that you are entitled to complain of the way that nature, has treated you."

She blushed a little, more at the tone of his voice than the words, and went on hastily: "Jess is the dearest, best and c everest woman in the whole world—there, I believe that she has only one fault, and that is that she thinks too much about me. Uncle told me that he hast old you how we cann have for when." in the whole world—there, I believe that she has only one fault, and that is that she thinks too much about me. Uncle told me that he had told you how we came here first when I was 8 years old. Well, I remember that when we lost our way on the weldt that might, and it refined so and was so cold, Jess took off her own shawl and wrapped it round me over my own. Well, it has been just like that with her always. I am always to have the shawl—everything is to give way to ma. But there, that is Jess all over; she is very cold, cold as a stone, I sometimes think, but when she does care, for anybody it is enough to frighten one. I don't know a great number of women, but somehow I don't think that there can be many in the world like Jess. She is too good for this wild place, she ought to go away to England, write books and become a famous woman, only, 'she added, reflectively, 'II am afraid that Jess' books would all be sad onea."

Just then Hessie stopped and suddenly changed color, the bunch of lank, wet feathers she held in her hand dropping from it with a little splash back into the both. Following her glange, John looked down the avanue of bluelgum trees and perceived a hig man with a broad hat and mounted on a splendid black horse, cantering leisurely toward the house.

"Who is that Miss Crotts" to asked.

"It is a man I don't like," she said, with a little stamp of her foot. "His name is Frank Muller, and he is half a Boer and half an Englishman. He is very rich and very clever, and owns all the land round this place, so ancle has to be civil to him, though he does not like him either. I winder what he wants now."

On came the horse, and John thought that the land were the wants now."

"I was not in the Zuiu war, Mr. Muller," he said, and just then old islins Croft came riding up, and the conversat on dropped.

Mr. Frank Muller stopped to dinner and far on into the attornoon. His lost ox seemed to have entirely slipped his mentory. There, he sat close to the fuir Bessie, spicking and drinking gin and water, and talking with great volubility in Eaglish, sprinkled with Boer Dutch terms that John Nisi did not understand, and gazing at the young lady in a manner which John somshow found unpiessant. Of course it was no affair of his, and he had no interest in the matter, but for all that he found the remarkable looking Dutchman exceedingly disagreeable. "I think," replied Jess, slowly and with much emphasis, "that he is the most odious man that I ever saw, and the most curious." And then she reliapsed into silence, only broken now and again by an eccasional remark about the fix wers and trees.

Half an hour afterward, when they arrived again at the top of the slope, Mr. Multer was just riding off down the avenue of blue gams. By the verauda stood a Hottentotnamed Jantic, who had been holding the Dutchman's house, the was a curious, wizened up little fellow, dressed in vags, and with hair like the worn tags of a black woolen, carpet. His age might have been anything between 25 and 60; it was impossible to form an opinion on the point. The receipts and expenditures of the School Department for the past municipal year are as follows:

Constant care has been exercised in the expenditure of the money in this Department. Repairs and improvements have been timely attended to and nothing allowed to go to loss.

The care of the schools implies a grave responsibility,—thirty-six school houses, eighty-five school rooms, thirty-eight hundred and sixty sittings to be kept in repair, each room to be kept warm or cold, as occasion requires, fuel to be provided, janitors employed and directed, the sandtary condition of each building wa chee, the health of teachers and pupils cured for, the grounds and enclosures kept in order, about dinety teachers to be paid once a month, a knowledge of the work of teachers and scholars infectious disease and exposures to sache to be grarded against, a general care over more than three thousand children to be exercised, make up a part of the duties of your School Agent; and to this might be added appropriate and scholars infectious disease and exposures to sache to be grarded against, a general care over more than three thousand children to be exercised, make up a part of the duties of your School Agent; and to this might be added and symptoms of Dyspepsia. Great arxiety pervudes parents, teachers and "cholars on a cloudy or slightly stormy morning, and it is not latrequent for twenty-flve or more inquiries to be made in a single morning, is there to be any school to-day? Is there to be any school to-day? So great has been the anxiety at times, that the question is suggested whether it is best to have the signal, and here allow us to say that we have been most acceptably served in this matter without charge, with the steem whiteles of Hinckley & Egery fron Company and the Bangor Foundry and Machine Company, who courteously volunter red the accommodation.

Among the most valuable improvements within the past few years, is the introduction of the Holly Water to the school houses, two of which were served the past year. The Prospect street building has all the sanitary arrangements desired; that year. The Prospect street desired; that all the sanitary arrangements desired; that on Pearl street has the water for disking only, as there is no sewer near, and your agent most respectfully recommends that sewer accommends that sewer accommendations in that vicin ty the constructed at an early day, as other parties in that neighborhood, besides the schools, need drainage. A marked increase has been going on in the higher grades of schools the last years and we are now crowded for room.

You will see by your committee's report that an additional teacher has been added to the High School, necessitating the use of the Library room for recitations add by the figures in the report, that the school was never as large as now.

The Union Square Grammar School building is packed to its utmost canacity.
